Design Concept and Process:

This is the third quilt in a series about birds that mate for life, and the second about eagles. I created an abstract background reminiscent of the landscape around Whidby Island in Puget Sound since that is the area where I have most often seen eagles in person. The quilt was created as a commission for a private client.

The eagles are made from fabrics that were hand painted and then heavily stitched with several different colors of thread. The more abstract background was also made from hand painted fabrics, and the trees were made from commercial fabric in the Glacier Park Collection by Caryl Bryer Fallert for Benartex. The binding is made from the same fabric.
